About:

I am Dr. Som Parkash, currently serving as an Associate Professor in the Department of Geography under the Faculty of Arts, Craft & Social Sciences. With over 10 years of teaching and research experience, my academic focus centers on the dynamic relationship between economic development and agricultural transformation, particularly in the context of rural India.

I earned my Ph.D. in Geography from Maharaja Ganga Singh University, Bikaner, in 2022. I also completed my M.A. in Geography from the same university in 2005, following my B.A. in 2003. Throughout my career, I have contributed 6 research publications and presented in 3 academic conferences, addressing contemporary geographic and socio-economic issues.

My research explores economic development and the changing patterns of agriculture, highlighting how modernization, land use transformation, and policy reforms shape the agricultural landscape. My key areas of interest include impact of economic growth on agricultural practices, modernization and technological shifts in farming, changing land use and crop patterns, and agricultural policy and rural economic transformation.

Through my work, I strive to provide valuable insights into sustainable rural development and contribute to academic and policy-oriented discussions on agricultural geography.
